While the commission does not recognize any coordination body, they do recognize the process. If there are two coordinating bodies in a given area, the commission has ruled that both coordinating bodies must agree.
This has come before them in cases that are in border areas and the landmark case in southern california with two 220 coordinating bodies.
Starting your own coordinating body is easy as all frequencies are immediatly available. The tough part is convincing the neighboring coordinating bodies of your finding. To solve some of these interjurisdictional disputes , many small coordinating bodies have joined to form super regional councils. This tends to take problem resolution out of the locals hands and into a larger arena. Sometimes it takes a larger venue to get gentleman to agree. After all this is what it is all about.
